

JOSEPH D. BAKER IS "FAVORITE SON"

Held In Esteem By Frederick's Citizens of All Classes.

By RALEIGH C. SMITH.

FREDERICK, Md., June 21.—Every community has its "leading citizen." Sometimes he is a public official and often a factor in politics, the head and front of an "organization," Democratic or Republican, as the case may be. But Frederick's "big man" is from his very simplicity a private in the ranks. He has no titles and enjoys no emoluments of office. He is Joseph D. Baker.

Mr. Baker occupies not only an enviable but a unique position in the business, civic, and social life of Frederick. He is not a politician, although his friends boomed him for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination in 1907, and his name was placed before the convention with Frederick and Washington counties solidly back of him.

It was no great disappointment to him that he was not nominated and elected governor of Maryland. He would have appreciated the honor and would have served the people faithfully and well, but that was all. His position was clearly defined and he was a part or parcel of the manipulations or "combinations." Generally when a man is mentioned for governor the feminine members of his family see in the realization of his dreams an attractive picture of social life and prestige at the executive mansion at Annapolis. This was not the case with Mrs. Baker and Miss Charlotte Baker, the only daughters of the house. It was not the case with the only son, Holmes Baker, a stalwart young fellow, now associated with his father in the Citizens' National Bank. Mr. Baker's wife and children did not want to cross him in any ambition, but they wanted him to be at all in the great, big family mansion on Church street where the most generous and cordial hospitality is dispensed to all comers whenever there is a gathering around. This refers not only to the neighbors, but is even more marked in its application to the "stranger within the gates."

Everybody Knows Him.

There is not a man, woman or child in Frederick county and the famous Middleton Valley who does not either know personally or by hearsay everything about "Joe" Baker. There is not a man, woman or child who does not say, in substance, "He is our big man."

Mr. Baker has been since its organization president of the Citizens' National Bank, recognized as one of the strongest financial institutions in the State, and the stock of which is in great demand at five times its par value. The banking business is his chosen vocation, and the Citizens' Bank, with its splendid new building, is his special pride; but, with his brothers, he is interested in other big enterprises, and spends several days a month at the Baltimore offices in charge of Daniel Baker.

When a man in Frederick wants to put up a new building he goes to see "Joe" Baker—possibly to have the project financed by the Citizens' Bank—but in any event to secure the moral cooperation and interest of Mr. Baker, of which he feels assured. When a church, school, an association of some sort or an individual gets into a tight place, same tactics are pursued. "Joe" Baker is sympathetic. And if it is advice or the judgment of another that is needed about something, no matter how intricate or delicate in nature, again it is Mr. Baker to be seen.

Leading Church Layman.

Mr. Baker is a leading layman in All Saints' Protestant Episcopal Church, but his acts of kindness and charity are not governed by creed or color. He no more stops to consider whether one is a Methodist, a Baptist or a Catholic than he bothers about the political affiliations of a man—whether he is a Democrat or a Republican. A neighbor is a neighbor to him, and that is his doctrine. When Mr. Baker leaves the bank in the middle of the day with his son, Holmes, for dinner at the family home, on Church street, he gathers in everybody who will go along with him. When he starts in his automobile for a spin over the hills and to the mountain overlooking the picturesque Braddock Heights he finds seats from unknown recesses for all those who will take a ride. And on the return trip to town if the passenger does not eat supper in the Church street mansion it is his own fault and he is also a person who can resist persuasion.

Frederick is a charming little city with much that is modern and progressive to recommend it. It is the center of a populous and prosperous country. It has a fine water supply, invigorating air, a display of wide-awake business enterprises and a warmth of hospitality that is not surpassed in more southern climes. And Frederick has its real "big man." He is plain "Joe" Baker.

BEEF, BOARDS, BUTTERINE BACK SENATOR LORIMER

Edward Hines, Director of Triple Interests, Entering Chicago Politics.

By O. P. NEWMAN.

CHICAGO, June 21.—In seeking "the men higher up" in the Senatorial bribery scandal Illinois has more than once turned their attention to Edward Hines, but each time has reluctantly passed on, in pursuit of some other clue, leaving Mr. Hines to the undisturbed conduct of the biggest lumber business of its kind in the world.

Mr. Hines is generally credited in Illinois with having pulled some of the heavily charged political wires that ignited the Lorimer spark at Springfield more than a year ago and sent the "blonde boss" to the American house of lords.

Mr. Hines smilingly admits he worked strenuously for the election of Lorimer in every legitimate way he could, but he denies positively that he exerted any improper influence on or two or three anti-Lorimer crowd of Illinois is in attributing improper actions to Mr. Hines, it has been able thus far to do nothing but hint vaguely that the man that is said to have purchased Mr. Lorimer's seat was swayed.

With Weyerhaeuser.

Hines, runty, alert, eagle-eyed, keen, merciless to his enemies, daring in business, quick of speech and action, a constant sufferer from ill health, is the Chicago end of the Weyerhaeuser timber and lumber combination. F. E. Weyerhaeuser, the head of the great organization, believed by many to be the richest man in the world, is interested in the Hines companies, and Hines is interested in his companies. Both are in partnership with Mackenzie and Mann, the builders and promoters of the Canadian Northern railroad and managers of its allied interests.

Why shouldn't a man of Mr. Hines' interests be desirous of having in the Senatorial campaign one or two or three Senators and Representatives who always feel friendly and always are ready to go the limit for him? Considering the community of interests of "beef, boards, and butterine" in Chicago, it is easy to understand why the stockyards people, the Hines lumber people, and the Mackenzie and Mann lumber people join hands in boosting the game of a man like Lorimer, who worked for the packing house interests when the meat inspection bill was up, who got millions of harbor improvement money for the accommodation of the Hines lumber steamers, and who fought the oleo tax for his friend and successor in the House, William J. Moxley.

But the country knows all about the packing interests and much about the butterine interests; not so the lumber interests and Mr. Hines. This Hines person handles a business whose volume amounts to $12,000,000 a year. Through his companies pass $5,000,000 feet of lumber every twelve months. He is naturally bound to be in politics, and the fact that his name and personality never before came to the surface nationally is purely accidental. He's been right on the job for years. From the great Green Bay district of Canada, as well as down in the pine sticks of Mississippi and Louisiana, his name is a household word.

Hines' Companies.

For instance, Mr. Hines is president of and owns a controlling interest in the Edward Hines Lumber Company, Chicago, Virginia and Rainey Lake Company, Virginia Lake, Minn., North Wisconsin Lumber and Manufacturing Company, Hayward, Wis., White River Lumber Company, Mason, Wis., Iron River Lumber Company, Iron River, Wis., Champion Lumber Company, Oriskany, Minn., First National Bank, Hayward, Wis., Mason State Bank, Mason, Wis., First National Bank, Hayward, Wis., and Mercantile Company, Hayward, Wis.

Mr. Hines is a director of the Continental National Bank, of Chicago, and will be a director of the newly organized $300,000,000 Continental-Commercial National Bank. He is president of the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association of the United States and ex-president of the Lumbermen's Association of Chicago.

And this isn't all, although one would think it would be enough for a person of his diminutive stature to hear up.

These are some of the other little business influences which operate under the guidance of this five-foot-four, instead of five-foot-seven.

A fleet of twenty-two lake freight steamers.

A chain of privately owned railroads.

EDWARD HINES, Chicago Millionaire Lumber Operator and Friend of Senator Lorimer.

transporting logs and lumber in the lake region.

The biggest wholesale lumber yard in the world—at Chicago.

Fifteen retail lumber yards in and about Chicago.

An army of 5,000 employees.

Timber lands in Canada, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Washington, Mississippi and Louisiana containing 5,000,000,000 feet of standing lumber and worth $35,000,000.

Enough lumber to supply the total American demand for thirty years.

The total value of the Hines and affiliated lumber interests must be in the neighborhood of a hundred million, and these vast properties are directed from a little ten by twelve office in a little ramshackle building in the Hines lumber yards, over in West Chicago, in the very middle of one of the hottest spots in America in summer and one of the coldest in winter.

The man whose fingers play constantly upon the pulses of these far-reaching industries is chronically ill, suffering from the handicap of having but one kidney; he is short and slight, weighing not much over a hundred pounds, with a sunken eye, a scraggly mustache, a heavily lined face and quick, nervous hands. He's a tightly bound coil of nervous mental energy and he never quits his business for an instant.

"What are Hines' fads and recreations?" was asked of another Chicago lumberman.

"Work," was the reply. "He never takes a vacation and never goes anywhere except to his office and his home or out over his properties. He works twenty-four hours a day and mourns because he can't work twenty-five."

No Book Education.

Hines has no book education. He went to the grammar school when a boy and at the age of fourteen began work at $4 a week in the big lumber yard that he now owns and makes his headquarters, and has been in the lumber business ever since. He is only forty-seven years old and has been in business for himself since 1882, the year the Hines Lumber Company was organized.

Hines is possessed of indomitable nerve. He is a plunger in business, but always lands on his feet, perhaps because he can see further into the future than others, who hesitate to take the chances he takes. His ambition is to control the lumber business of the Northwest, or at least to be one of two or three men who control it. If he survives the terrific strain and enjoys the luck which has attended him in the past, he is in a good way to achieve his goal.

Edward Hines is well known at the Capitol in Washington among Western and Northwestern members of Congress, towards many of whom he has been exceedingly friendly.

He is also a close friend of Senator Aldrich and is reputed to have helped that astute tariff expert with the lumber schedule of the recent tariff bill. Mr. Hines was in the city at the time Congress was so badly worried over the question of the size of the lumber duty and held many conferences with the Senate and House organization leaders.

When he returned home, after the tariff bill was disposed of, he was decidedly pleased with the results of his efforts, and has so expressed himself on numerous occasions in Chicago.

Hines has been building rapidly into such a position in the business and financial world that he was sure to break into the political limelight sooner or later. The wonder is that it wasn't sooner. The country need not be surprised if it hears a great deal from and about him in the future.

CHAPEL IN CHARGE OF BAPTIST CHURCH

Anacostia Congregation to Conduct Mission Hitherto Undenominational.

WASHINGTON TIMES BUREAU.

ANACOSTIA, D. C., June 21.—If a movement that has been started recently is carried on to completion, the interdenominational chapel that has been under construction at Washington Highlands, south of Congress Heights, will hereafter be conducted as a Baptist mission under the auspices of the Anacostia Baptist Church.

For several years the chapel, or rather the Sunday school department, has been in operation, union services being held, the ministers for the services being assigned to the duty from Washington pulpits. The construction of the chapel has not been far advanced yet, but it was decided by the persons interested in the project that the movement should be placed under the direction of one church.

To this end the land and the chapel have been deeded to the congregation of the Anacostia Baptist Church, and it is the understanding that the Rev. Frank L. Barden, the pastor, in future, will be in charge of the chapel.

The Sunday school of St. Teresa's Church has been closed for the summer months.

The improvements that have been under way to the interior of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Anacostia for several weeks are approaching completion and the congregation will be in possession of the building again for regular services beginning Sunday next.

A plan has been started for a union of the choirs of the several churches in Anacostia for the purpose of holding a musical festival in the fall.
